S-1 Coding Instructions – U.S. National Climate Counter-movement Organizations

The purpose of this organizational coding is to identify the organizations that make up the climate counter-movement in the United States. Definition of climate counter-movement – organizations that advocate against government policies to take substantive action to mitigate climate change. Specifically, this movement opposes mandatory restrictions on GHG emissions, either through regulations or a carbon fee. The advocacy of this community contains several different arguments, such as:

1. Climate change is not occurring.
2. Climate change is occurring, but it is not due to humans.
3. Climate change is occurring, and it is due to humans. But it does not pose a sufficient threat to justify large scale action or climate change will be beneficial.
4. Climate change is occurring, and it is due to humans. But it is too expensive to deal with.
5. Climate change is occurring, and it is due to humans. However, voluntary actions will be sufficient to address this issue.

Your task is to review information about this organization, and assign a code that describes the role of this organization in this movement. There are four codes that you can assign to the organization:

1. Climate Counter-movement single focus organization - climate change sole focus
2. Climate Counter-movement multiple focus organization – climate change substantive focus, but not sole focus
3. Climate Counter-movement Peripheral Organization – climate change minor focus
4. Not Climate Counter-movement Organization

Coding Steps

To code an organization, the first step is to examine its participation in several well-known climate counter-movement events or coalitions. These are participation or sponsorship of the ICC conference, or participation in the Global Climate Coalition, Alliance for Climate Strategies, or the Cooler Heads Coalition. Generally, participation in these coalitions signifies a minimum coding of 3 for this organization. Information about participation in these events or coalitions is available on the organization Excel spread sheet. Enter the results of this review in the External Activities blocks on the coding sheet.

The second step is to do a Google search of the organization. Generally, this will turn up the site of the organization, and in a large majority of cases, a Wikipedia site, and organizational description sites developed by both “Source Watch” and Greenpeace. You should read these descriptions and first enter the type of organization in the Nature of Organization box on the coding sheet.

You then need to decide if there is evidence that this organization is generally perceived to be part of the climate counter-movement. You should enter the results on the External Web Site Descriptions blocks.

The fourth step is to go to the organization’s web site. You should read the organization’s mission (usually listed in the tab labeled “about us.”) Then look over the web site, looking for statements regarding the extent and nature of the organization’s involvement with climate change. You should answer the questions on the coding sheet under the headings of Organization Web Site Review, Nature of Arguments Presented Regarding Climate Change, and Actions Advocated to Address Climate Change.

The fifth step is to review the most recent copy of the organization’s IRS 990 form. Go to www.guidestar.org, and enter the organization’s name. This will bring up information regarding the organization, as well as links to the IRS forms of the organization. Open the most recently available IRS 990 form, and fill out the blocks in the IRS 990 Review section of the coding form.

The final step is to code the organization into one of four categories. Based on the information obtained about the organization, enter a code of 1-4 in the block Organizational Coding.

Climate Change Countermovement Organizations Income Distribution 2003 - 2010

Methodological Appendix

Organizational Listing Procedure

To develop a comprehensive roster of CCCM organizationsⁱ for this study, a two-step process was used. First, a consolidated list of all of the organizations identified in prior studies was created. ^{.ii} This compilation resulted in a list of 538 organizations for consideration as a CCCM organization. These organizations were then individually examinedⁱⁱⁱ by two independent coders and assigned to one of the following four categories:^{iv}

1. CCCM Single Focus Organization - climate change is its sole focus
2. CCCM Multiple Focus Organization – climate change focus substantive, but not sole concern
3. CCCM Peripheral Organization – climate change minor focus
4. Not a CCCM Organization – no apparent focus on climate change

For example, the Science and Environmental Policy Project was coded into the first category as solely focused on the issue of climate change. This organization is engaged only in the climate change arena. Alternatively, the Cato Institute was coded into the second group, as having a substantive but not exclusive focus on climate change. While the Cato Institute is a significant organization in the CCCM, it is not focused only on the issue of climate change, and participates in a number of different issue arenas. This coding resulted in the following distribution of organizations:

31	CCCM single focus organization
87	CCCM multiple focus organization
100	CCCM peripheral organization
320	Not a CCCM Organization

The 118 organizations coded as either having a sole (1) or substantive (2) policy focus on climate change were selected for further analysis, and together constitute a comprehensive sample of the core CCCM organizations in the U.S. The coding sheet, procedures, and list of selected organizations are provided in the Supplemental Material, Tables S-1 to S-3 (See Supplementary Material, pages 2-4).

To evaluate the adequacy of this sample, an organizational comparison was conducted utilizing the listings of CCCM think tanks compiled in two previous studies (McCright and Dunlap 2000 and Jacques, Dunlap, and Freeman 2008). This comparative analysis showed that more than 90% of the organizations examined in these two previous analyses were also included in the 118 organizations on which this analysis is based. The key organizational entities in the CCCM are think tanks, advocacy organizations, and trade associations. The distinction between think tanks and advocacy organizations is somewhat arbitrary and is based on the organization's self-description. For example, the Heartland Association describes itself as a "think tank," but clearly engages in advocacy work. Based on these self-descriptions, the sample is comprised of 30.5% (36/118) think tanks, 44.9% (53/118) advocacy organizations, 11.9% (14/118) trade associations, and 12.7% (15/118) other organizations, such as blog sites and operating foundations. This distribution is generally in line with other analyses of the composition of the CCCM (Dunlap and McCright 2011: 148 – 154), and thus this sample should provide a valid measure of the core organizations of the U.S. CCCM.

Funding Data Procedures

To determine the amount and sources of income for the CCCM organizations, IRS data were extracted from both the National Center for Charitable Statistics and the Foundation Center for the period 2003 to 2010. Due to limits on the Foundation Center's data, this time frame is the longest that can be analyzed, and thus sets the limits of the time frame that could be examined. However, this range covers an extremely important period in history encompassing the time before and after a peak of climate change media coverage, legislative hearings, and public concern that ran from 2007 to 2009 (Brulle, Carmichael, and Jenkins 2011).

The first step in this analysis was to compile data on the income for the CCCM organizations. Of the 118 CCCM organizations in the sample, IRS income data was available for only 91 organizations.^v The other 27 organizations did not file IRS information returns because they had not applied for formal nonprofit status, and were not required by law to submit this information. For those 91 CCCM organizations that did file with the IRS, financial information (based on Form IRS 990) was downloaded from the National Center for Charitable Statistics web site.^{vi} Where data was incomplete, examination of the IRS 990 filings was conducted. The other organizations did not file IRS 990 forms.

To obtain foundation funding data for each CCCM organization, the Foundation Center grants data base was utilized.^{vii} This data base was searched using the names of those 91 CCCM organizations that had IRS records. This provided data on the grants that each organization received for this time period. Where Foundation Center data was incomplete, the individual IRS 990 PF filings of the foundations were examined. This was an especially important step in ensuring data quality in that both Donors Trust and Donors Capital Foundations, which together are the single largest contributing foundations to CCCM organizations, are not listed in the Foundation Center's data base. This examination resulted in the identification of 9,094 individual grants from 1170 different foundation with a total funding amount of $620 million. To reduce the size of the data set to manageable proportions, major foundation funders of CCCM organizations were identified and selected. Major foundation funders were identified as having given $500,000 or more over the 2003 – 2010 time period, or $200,000 in any one year. This resulted in the identification of 146 major CCCM organization funders.^{viii} This list was then further consolidated to account for the presence of multiple foundations that operated under the same controlling boards (such as the three Koch managed foundations). These foundations contributions were consolidated and analyzed as a single foundation.^{ix} After this consolidation, the final sample for analysis consisted of 140 foundations making 5,299 grants and a total funding level of $558 million. These grants were given to 69 CCCM organizations out of the total of 91 CCCM organizations that had IRS data. There was no record of any grants being given to 22 CCCM organizations in the sample. This consolidation dramatically reduced both the number of foundations and individual grants. However, because these grants were small, and came from peripheral funders of CCCM organizations, the total funding level was only reduced by 10%. This process provided a workable data set enabled an examination of the financial income of the 91 CCCM organizations.

ⁱ Defining it as the “Denial Machine”, Dunlap and McCright (2011: 148 – 154) see this countermovement composed of 1) trade associations and corporations, 2) think tanks, 3) foundations 4) advocacy/front groups, 5) Sympathetic scientists, 6) Right wing media, and 7) Politicians. Neubauer (2011: 66) defines this countermovement as the “Elite Policy and Information Infrastructure (EPII)”, which is defined as “a decentralized yet interlocked network of conservative intellectuals, activists, think tanks, corporations, foundations, and advocacy organizations.” Finally, Knight and Greenberg (2011: 326) define the “Skeptic” movement as being composed of “corporations, industry associations, corporate-funded foundations, think-tanks, public relations firms, sympathetic intellectuals, academics and media outlets, and elite-funded front groups composed of interested citizens.”

ⁱⁱ Criteria and Studies utilized to compile this comprehensive listing of potential CCCM organizations are:

1. Organization represented by a speaker/sponsorship at any of the ICC/Heartland Conference
2. Organization participated in the Global Climate Coalition
3. Organization participated in Alliance for Climate Strategies
4. Organization participated in the Cooler Heads Coalition
5. Organization listed as a climate skeptic organization in Merchants of Doubt (Oreskes and Conway 2010)
6. Organization listed in the Greenpeace study of climate change counter-movement (Greenpeace 2010)
7. Organization listed in the Union of Concerned Scientists study of climate change counter-movement (Union of Concerned Scientists 2007)
8. Organization listed in NCRP study of Conservative Organizations (NCRP 1997: 46-53)

ⁱⁱⁱ Specific coding instructions were developed and a coding form prepared (see Supplemental Material S-1 and S-2, pages 2-3, and the Methodological Appendix, page 117).

^{iv} An intercoder reliability comparison was conducted, and this resulted in a Krippendorff’s Alpha of .866.

^v Detailed annual income for each organization is presented in the Supplementary Material Table S-4 (See Supplemental Material pages 5-35).

^{vi} <http://nccs.urban.org/>

^{vii} <http://foundationcenter.org/>

^{viii} All grants made by the foundations to each organization were treated as income to the organization in the same year as when the foundation awarded the grant. In one case, this accounting procedure shows that one organization received more in grants than its annual contributions as reported by the IRS. Since this only occurs ones, and is for less than $25,000, it does not significantly impact the analysis. For organizations with accounting periods that did not coincide with the calendar year, the year was assigned based on the year in with the majority of the months for the reporting period occurred. Finally, all grants were included, regardless of the specific purpose of the grant. The vast majority of the grants (88.2%) had no specific purpose identified other than “continued support.” Where specific purposes were listed, they were predominantly generic, such as “research”, “publications”, or “conferences.”

Coors Affiliated Foundations = combination of the giving of the Castle Rock& Coors Foundation.
Scaife = sum of Sarah Scaife, Carthage, and Allegheny Foundations
Koch = sum of Charles Koch, David Koch, and Claude B. Lambe Foundations
Donors = sum of Donors Trust and Donors Capital
