A table shows an array for six attributes with two levels each. The lower, less attractive level is allocated to \( = 0 \). The more attractive level is allocated \( = 1 \). The array produces an extreme scenario \((000000)\), which is undesirable, therefore modulo arithmetic is used on it to transform every third digit to its opposite. Scenarios are then constructed from the new array.