The projected future extinction rate is more than ten times higher than the current rate. The current extinction rate is up to one thousand times higher than the long-term average extinction rate from the fossil record. For every thousand mammal species, less than one went extinct every millennium.