Title: Inequality in provider continuity for children by Australian General Practitioners

Version: 2 Date: 10 August 2011

Reviewer's report:

The authors have largely answered earlier comments. The tables are improved. The renaming of the paper solves a number of criticisms. There is still room to add 1-2 sentences about the reasons why continuity is considered (by the authors and other health professionals) an essential characteristic of general practitioner care - and therefore why the study investigated this.

I have no further comments.
