Reviewer’s report

Title: Survivors living at home, two years post-stroke: the effects of language function, dissatisfactions with services and information on their quality of life

Version: 1 Date: 24 June 2013

Reviewer: Rachid R Soulimani

Reviewer’s report:

The research is interesting and it addresses the importance of psycho-social aspects in the management of patients with stroke and its evolution.

Reading the article is not easy because of the writing style in English.

The authors have conducted many studies; however, there remain some questions:

• The authors reported from the stress, What is this part in the deterioration of the health of patients?
• Luxembourg is a multilingual country. What is the part of the language that patients be wrong?
• Is there a difference between stroke and other neurodegenerative diseases such as Alzheimer in effects of language function, dissatisfactions with services and information on their quality of life?

Level of interest: An article of importance in its field

Quality of written English: Needs some language corrections before being published