Title: Compressed air blast injury with palpebral, orbital, facial, cervical, and mediastinal emphysema through an eyelid laceration: Case report and literature review

Version: 3  Date: 1 July 2013

Reviewer: peter bjerre toft

Reviewer's report:

The authors have to some extent, changed their manuscript according to my suggestion – I love the picture of the patients work place! The authors did still not indicate the search terms they used for their PubMed search. However the manuscript has improved.

I suggest that the authors send the manuscript for English editing, it can be done over the internet and only costs a few hundred dollars. The English is understandable but not nice.

Level of interest: An article whose findings are important to those with closely related research interests

Quality of written English: Needs some language corrections before being published

Statistical review: No, the manuscript does not need to be seen by a statistician.
