Title: Gender difference in suicidal expressions and its determinants among young people in Cambodia, a post-conflict country.

Version: 2 Date: 2 January 2011

Reviewer: Maurizio Pompili

Reviewer's report:

The authors have provided an investigation on gender difference in "suicidal expressions" and their determinants among young people in Cambodia. This is of interest for the journal. Nevertheless, the quality of English language is not adequate to the standard of a published paper. I would also reconsider this paper with clear explanation of the nomenclature involved, such as "suicidal expressions". According the current nomenclature in suicidology what the authors reported is not in line with current guidelines. There also comments left by the authors in the text and reference style need revision.

Level of interest: An article whose findings are important to those with closely related research interests

Quality of written English: Not suitable for publication unless extensively edited

Statistical review: No, the manuscript does not need to be seen by a statistician.
