Title: A survey on depression among infertile women in Ghana

Version: 1 Date: 23 September 2013

Reviewer: Alice D Domar

Reviewer’s report:

Major compulsory revisions:
1. There needs to be far more information on how patients were recruited and what information was shared during the recruitment process. Were the 100 women included in the study the only 100 women recruited? And were they told it was a study on depression? Because if in fact prospective patients were told they were being recruited for a study on depression, it is possible that women who had depressive symptoms would have been more likely (or less) to participate in the research, thus biasing it in one direction. The prevalence of 62% is high, but one needs to know if this is the true prevalence in this population, or only in women who agreed to participate.

Minor essential revisions:
1. Needs to be rewritten with proper English

Level of interest: An article whose findings are important to those with closely related research interests

Quality of written English: Needs some language corrections before being published

Statistical review: No, the manuscript does not need to be seen by a statistician.
