Reviewer's report:

The authors state in their response that they made no edits regarding my one major critique. I think they should incorporate a brief mention of their response in the text itself. They did a nice job.

I'm still concerned about language/grammar and hope the journal has a strong copy editor to remedy the problems. Just a quick example is p. 9, 1st paragraph, "This cause implied the 42.7% of BD false negatives." Can a _cause_ imply anything...? It's just really awkward, and these kinds of problems plague the manuscript.
