Title: An Experience of Virtual Leadership Development for Human Resource Managers

Version: 1 Date: 17 December 2008

Reviewer: Alexandre Goubarev

Reviewer's report:

This article is a very useful contribution, with a good approach on how to build management and leadership through a simple, innovative, modern, user-friendly distance learning mechanism.

The proof of its success is found in the outcomes it has had in different countries. The approach developed by the virtual leadership development programme has clearly been well received by countries. Sometimes there can be resistance to such initiatives, but as this is a user-friendly and effective programme, it has been recognised by countries as having great value.

It is written in a good style and is brief, informative with clear messages. It is well presented in a condensed manner and the facts are easily picked up by the reader.

The language is clear and it is well structured.

Minor Essential Revisions

The grouping in lists of certain organisations (i.e. USAID with WHO) should be separated into appropriate groups of the asme type.
