Title: Role of pharmacists in developing countries: current scenario in Pakistan.

Version: 1 Date: 18 February 2009

Reviewer’s report:

This is a very interesting and well written review article and places pharmacy in Pakistan in its current context. A paragraph on the evidence for the role of the pharmacist in public health and community pharmacy would be useful to place the review in context and illustrate what pharmacists might be trained to do. It would be interesting if the authors could also place pharmacy in the context of other health professionals for example how many doctors work in the community and primary care and discuss the HR issues for those professions in Pakistan.

Level of interest: An article of importance in its field

Quality of written English: Acceptable
