Title: Mild Facial Palsy Following Superficial Temporal Artery Biopsy: a case report.

Version: 1 Date: 17 May 2010

Comments to authors:

Even this is an interesting and exemplary case report, the recommendation for the incision on one side and the possible variants of the course of facial nerve on the other side have to be discussed in more details. However, the recommendation for incision cannot be correct, as the eyebrow incision is a standard and safe incision in skull base surgery. The discussion has to be only focused on these two aspects. Perhaps, it may be interesting to make a table with the previous published cases included the present case.
