Title: A double patella-like condition secondary to synovial osteochondromatosis.

Reviewer's report:

I think that the loose body is big but does not look like the patella. Not many doctors would consider this case to be double patella. The diagnosis of this case was actually a giant loose body formed in the patello-femoral joint. The author should not make a discussion mainly on double patella but on giant osteochondroma after the surgery 60 years ago. More reference concerning giant osteochondroma not double patella also should be collected. The data of the patient’s first treatment at the age of 2 are needed for publication. It would be another question whether a case report of giant osteochondroma in this case will be accepted by the journal or not, though.
