To Authors,

This paper is a well written research article from a single institution who performed liver transplantation in Jehovah's witnesses who are challenging patients especially for major surgeries associated with significant blood loss and transfusion. There are few publications regarding perioperative management of liver transplantation among these patients. Pre and intraoperative techniques used to decrease surgical blood loss are well described throughout the manuscript. However, postoperative techniques used during ICU stay are not mentioned. Since drainage after these surgeries may be massive.

My suggestion is to add blood scavenging techniques used among these Jehovah witnesses after liver transplantation in critical care. Thus their successful perioperative experience will help other physicians to manage these group of patients worldwide.
