Title: What kind of systematic review should I conduct? A proposed typology and guidance for systematic reviewers in the medical and health sciences

Version: 0 Date: 24 Jun 2017

Reviewer's report:

General:

Overall, the manuscript is well written and well organized. The authors provided very detailed and comprehensive guidelines to conduct systematic reviews in medical and health sciences.

I have several minor comments.

Minor:

1. Can experiential reviews be also quantitative? For example, some experiences might be measured by ratings or scores.

2. It might be better to add another column to Table 1 to explain what each type of review means. A question example might not informative enough to provide a clear picture about the purpose of different types of reviews so that the reviewers can choose the right one from.

3. In the 'Expert opinion/policy reviews' section, the last several sentences have some issues and need to be reorganized. For example, 'its nature and characteristics should be described' appeared twice.
