Title: Reliability of routinely collected anthropometric measurements in primary care

Version: 1 Date: 06 Mar 2019

Reviewer: Catherine M. Crespi

Reviewer's report:

I am still concerned that the study is biased towards high agreement due to several important factors, such as the fact that, as stated by the authors "The practices that volunteered to participate were already participating in research through TARGet Kids!, therefore may have more standardized protocols related to measurement compared to other primary care practices in Ontario" and the fact that the practitioners knew they were being observed. The conclusion should be more tempered.
