Title: Encapsulating peritoneal sclerosis in a patient after allogeneic hematopoietic stem cell transplantation

Version: 2 Date: 20 Dec 2017

Reviewer: Simon Harrison

Reviewer's report:

This is an interesting case that is quite well written except for a few typographical and grammatical errors which should be proof read by and person with English as a first language.

Some further details of the case would be useful page 6 what was the details of HLA matching of the two transplants and the timing of engraftment should be detailed.

Page 7 was the presumed engraftment syndrome treated with steroids? Was the ascites and liver dysfunction persistent for the whole time up until the ascetic tap was performed? I assume that the BO was treated, with what?, and that is why the serositis improved?

Discussion, given that serositis in general is unusual I would have expected some discussion about the treatment, etiology and outcomes of this before a detailed discussion of peritoneal sclerosis
