Reviewer’s report:

Dear Authors,

Leptospirosis is an emerging global public health problem, especially in developing countries such as Nepal. Although the disease is a zoonotic and burden in animals and domestic cows and dogs which meant the reservoirs of the disease, so we need further more studies with larger sample size to notified this problem in such regions and to prevent infections caused by this organism, additionally, there were missed diagnosis by other febrile illness such as typhoid fever and dengue, so I recommend the suggested changes below,
