This is a well conducted study of sufficient quality to warrant publication. The manuscript is written in a manner that is easy to read and follow. The only criticism is that the authors should have provided a better explanation of why the scale is important. They write that the scale has been evaluated by others. Why is another validation necessary? How should the scale be used? Does using the scale provide any clinical value? Does the use of the scale improve patient outcomes? I believe a paragraph in the discussion section addressing these and similar issues would be of value to the reader.
