Title: Preferences for aspects of antenatal and newborn screening: a systematic review

Version: 0 Date: 07 Jan 2019

Reviewer: Laura Sarno

Reviewer's report:

The paper by Vass et al, is a systematic review of studies eliciting preferences for antenatal and postnatal screening programs. They focus on two different methods for quantifying preferences and the impact of different attributes.

The topic is quite difficult and I don't know if it will be of great interest for your readers. However, the paper is well written and the review is well structured, therefore I think it deserves publication.
