Title: First Case of Primary Intraocular Natural Killer T-cell Lymphoma

Version: 0 Date: 22 Sep 2015

Reviewer: Christoph Deuter

Reviewer’s report:

This is a very interesting case that is nicely described.

I have only few comments or questions:

1.) Left eye of the patient was not affected at all?

2.) Page 5, line 69: the authors report that a vitrectomy was performed.

Page 6, line 83: the authors mention a histological examination of the retina. Was a biopsy of the retina was performed in addition?

3.) I would be interested why the authors call this case a study and why they collected approval from review board and registered a study? In my opinion, all procedures that have been performed in this patient were necessary to establish diagnosis and to plan treatment. Thus, all procedures were in the context of regular medical care and not primarily for scientific research.

4.) Which kind of chemotherapy has to be done for such a tumor?
