Title: Brittle cornea syndrome: a case report and review of the literature

Version: 0 Date: 11 Mar 2018

Reviewer's report:

Although interesting topic of a rare genetic disorder affecting the eyes, this manuscript have several major shortcomings preventing it to be published in this form:

1. Level of English language used is very low and in dire need of major revision. I find the usage of the phrase "6-year-old yellow female patient" especially inappropriate.

2. The Discussion section of the paper needs rethinking. Most of it would probably better fit in the Introduction section since most of the genetic testing and diagnostics were not done in this case.

3. Fundus photographs don't seem "normal". There seems to be some whitish changes emanating from the PNO, resembling demyelinated nerve fibers. Maybe it is just reflection from the flash while taking the picture...
