Title: Human herpesvirus-6 corneal endothelitis after intravitreal injection of ranibizumab

Version: 0 Date: 20 Jun 2018

Reviewer: Alejandro Fonollosa Calduch

Reviewer’s report:

This is an interesting case of a corneal endothelitis due to HHV-6 after intravitreal injections of ranibizumab. I have a few comments:

In the title and throughout the paper "endothelitis" is misspelled

1. In the abstract:

   - Please correct the OS VA value, you have written 2/20
   - the authors should provide the IOP, since it is relevant for the diagnosis
   - According to the photographs I would say keratic precipitates are intermediate, not fine

2. Main text:

   - Again I think precipitates are intermediate
   - Line 69: it would be interesting to know the dose of steroids
   - Line 70: I would changed "has received..." for "had been receiving.."
   - Line 90: the authors should explain why IgM antibodies were positive, that is to say acute infection, since as it is stated in the introduction, HHV-6 infection tipically occurs during chilhood

The Discussion is too large; as it is recommended in the instructions for authors: "a brief summary of the clinical impact or potential implications of the case report" is enough; please make the discussion shorter.

Are the methods appropriate and well described?
