Reviewer's report:

I thank the authors for a manuscript nuancing the understanding of mechanisms that may be involved in the development of Alzheimer's disease (AD). This study has limitations regarding sample size, single center and cross-sectional design as the authors commendable have pointed in the discussion. Additionally, clinical studies on elderly always face the problem of recruiting healthy controls and homogenous patient groups as ageing implies degenerative biological changes and is properly addressed in this manuscript. Despite the methodological concerns this study expands the knowledge on mechanisms that may be targets in future prevention of AD. This study additionally may contribute to adequate power calculation in the planning of future studies.
