Title: Prepubertal onset of slipped capital femoral epiphysis associated with hypothyroidism: a case report and literature review

Version: 0 Date: 26 Jun 2017

Reviewer: Mark Hannon

Reviewer's report:

This is an interesting case and comprehensive literature review. I have no fault to find with the methodology of the paper. The English language usage however is suboptimal and should be revised

Page 5: do the authors have any suggestions as to why this disorder is so much more common in UK / USA than in Japan? Do they feel this is all obesity related?

Page 6 line 19: no need to say "free thyroxine 4" - the 4 is superfluous.

Page 6: what other investigations were undertaken on the child? Presumably the ACTH, GH axes were tested via dynamic function testing? Details need to be given about this.

Are the methods appropriate and well described?
