Title: A rare lethal case of severe acute necrotizing pancreatitis due to a parathyroid adenoma in a third-trimester pregnant woman

Version: 0 Date: 16 Jun 2019

Reviewer: Kursad Unluhizarci

Reviewer's report:

Parathyroid adenoma associated with pregnancy is not a common clinical condition. Furthermore, lethal acute pancreatitis triggered by hyperparathyroidism is an unfortunate condition. In general, the manuscript is well-written and discussed the clinical scenario appropriately.

A have minor suggestions.

1- Exclusion of hypertriglyceridemia and cholelithiasis should be emphasized.

2- Does the patient have relevant family history and those with other related endocrinopathies.

3- Lines 94-96. The sentences ("The aetiology of pancreatitis ………….“). should be improved and should be more clear.

4- It would be better to present the biochemical data in a Table.
