Version: 0 Date: 12 Jul 2019

Reviewer's report:

It is a case report of multiple autoimmune diseases including autoimmune polyglandular syndrome, bronchial asthma, thymoma associated MG. The case report underlines the higher risk of autoimmune disease in patients with one autoimmune disease and suggest that HLA typing analysis may aid to identify diseases susceptible population, and diagnose earlier.

- As the patient had thymoma, I am wondering whether the patient had anti-titin antibody positivity.

- How the diagnosis of MG was confirmed as they did not mention the single fiber EMG or repetitive nerve stimulation.

- It seems that the patient had isolated ocular MG, I am wondering why they did not tried pyridostigmine. Moreover it would be better to explain the cause of azathioprine treatment (MG or autoimmune polyglandular syndrome) as in patients with ocular MG , the azathioprine could be second line treatment. The prednisolone dose is also very low, it would be better to explain the rational of treatment strategy.
