Title: Development of a Greek Oral Health Literacy Measurement Instrument: GROHL

Version: 1 Date: 23 Oct 2019

Reviewer: Ricardo Cartes-Velásquez

Reviewer's report:

The manuscript have improved, and authors have addressed almost all comments. However, they have fail to:- Support the election of REALD-30 as a basis for the development of GROHL. They said "because it is the most commonly used instrument in dentistry", but most common is a weak argument. All OHL instruments have pros and cons, authors must support their election using these parameters.- Support the mixing of CTT and IRT approaches. I used the term mix because IRT and CTT demands different statistical assumptions, and authors do not provide any info about the analysis of that assumptions.
