Title: Safety classification of herbal medicines used among pregnant women in Asian Countries: A Systematic Review

Version: 0 Date: 30 Jun 2017

Reviewer: Nidal Jaradat

Reviewer's report:

Good paper but needs to clarify the following point: you said that Peppermint, aniseed and olibanum were the most frequently used and were 43 among the modalities classified as potentially harmful to use in pregnancy but these plants in normal dose not harmful only in large doses and if the pregnant women took them for treatment of heartburn or spasm are not harmful as well as many of prescribing heartburn drugs for pregnant women contain peppermint kindly clarify this point.
