This is an interesting and well-written paper that adds an original contribution to the field. The methods are very well described and the results are presented clearly. There is an appropriate discussion based on the results and limitations are acknowledged. My only query is that there is no mention of the students' year group on the course and any association with the variables. I would expect that more senior students would have higher perceived competence and been more likely to have had research involvement and interest than first or second year students. There are no demographics presented for how many students were from different years on the course. I think this is another influencing variable that could be considered.

Are the methods appropriate and well described?
