Title: Students´ perception of interprofessional education in the bachelor program "Interprofessional Health Care" in Heidelberg, Germany: an exploratory case study

Version: 0  Date: 29 Sep 2017

Reviewer: Maria Kvarnström

Reviewer's report:

There is a high relevance for studies (like this) regarding IPE in the German context as, in contrast to many other countries and subsequent publications, medical training is university based whereas many other health professions are not (as you highlight).

It could be interesting to present more about the outline/design of the bachelor program (even though there is a reference), for readers to know some key issues when reading this paper.

It could be interesting to know if there were any difference between the professions in perceiving the bachelor program / the interprofessional learning. If the case is that no pattern could be seen regarding viewpoints depending of professions, it could be interesting to mention that.
