Title: Designing faculty development: lessons learnt from a qualitative interpretivist study exploring students' expectations and experiences of clinical teaching

Version: 0 Date: 12 Feb 2018

Reviewer: Sam Leinster

Reviewer's report:

This is a well-conceived study that addresses a relevant and important question. The background to the study is well described and justifies the need for the study. The study design is appropriate. More detail is required in the methods section - How was coding agreed? Who identified the themes? How were differences in perception resolved? The results are very clearly expressed. Table 1 is particularly helpful in highlighting the differences between the students' expectations and their experience. The discussion is pertinent and supported by the data.
