Title: Relationship between students’ perceptions of the adequacy of M1 and M2 curricula and their performance on USMLE Step 1 examination

Version: 1 Date: 25 Aug 2019

Reviewer's report:

The authors have clearly been responsive to the reviewers' recommendations and made revisions in those areas. I still feel that the description of the methods for the qualitative analysis is too sketchy. In addition, I still feel that the conclusions of the paper, that students are generally accurate in identifying inadequacies in their preclinical instruction, which are reflected in inadequacies in their Step 1 performance, makes a marginally important contribution to the literature. But perhaps these data will have impact for those who are skeptical of student input and make the case for faculty respecting and utilizing student self-report data.
