Title: Mechanisms of change and participant outcomes in a Recovery Education Centre for individuals transitioning from homelessness: a qualitative evaluation.

Version: 0 Date: 11 Mar 2020

Reviewer: Chang Zeng

Reviewer's report:

Paige Carlson and colleagues report on utilizing data from LLFS to evaluate the prevalence of pathogenic variants associated with Mendelian-inherited disorders and compare the allele frequencies with that from public databases.

The authors may want to consider the following aspects:

1. Because this study primarily focuses on Caucasian population, it would be helpful to provide the demographic and clinical features of the general population in public databases (age, gender, ethnicity and disease history etc.)?

2. Of these 464 genes, how many genes are on the ACMG list of secondary genetic findings?

3. How many variants have been annotated? It is not clear how many variants have been filtered or kept in each step?

Are the methods appropriate and well described?
