Reviewer's report:

The manuscript investigated burden of disease attributable to occupational risks in China, 1990-2017 as a part of the GBD study. The subject of this study is of importance and the results provides very practical information about occupational health in China. The study had been designed properly and the authors have arranged the findings in a very thoughtful and scholarly way, but the literature review as well as comparison of the finding with those of previous works have been weak. There are a number of papers on similar topics for investigation of environmental/occupational burden of disease that should be used and cited in the manuscript. I listed some of the papers as follows:
