Title: Reforming Medical Education Admission & Training in Low- and Middle-Income Countries: Who Gets Admitted and Why it Matters

Version: 0  Date: 20 Sep 2019

Reviewer: Andreasta Meliala

Reviewer's report:

This commentary article has not been mentioning about health system, since the first sentence. Many references has revealed that system will affect behavior, in this case health system will affect the healthcare provider's behavior.

The other issue is related to selection of candidates who have positive intrinsic motivation profile. It will be very difficult to select students with particular profile. In low resource setting, the positive intrinsic motivation can be covered by unfavourable behavior, as an impact of negative environment. This article is expected to share several practical aspect to address this issue.

Small evidence that shows how education and training can be a prominent factors to create intrinsic motivation, should be written in this article.
