Title: Household Fuel Use and Adverse Pregnancy Outcomes in a Ghanaian Cohort Study

Version: 0 Date: 22 Oct 2019

Reviewer: Anthony Ajayi

Reviewer's report:

This is a well written article that addresses an important topic. The introduction is adequate and addresses what is known about the topic and gaps requiring further studies thus justifying the need for this study. The method is incomplete. Referring readers to other study is enough, there is a need for readers to be able to comprehensively assess a study methodology. Information concerning sampling, recruitment, inclusion and exclusion criteria and study procedure are lacking. Lastly, there is a need to explain the possible mechanism through which exposure to pollution during cooking could influence perinatal mortality and Apgar score. The broader public health implications and policy implications are not adequately discussed.
