Title: TITLE: CHARGE SYNDROME: Genetic aspects and Dental Challenges, A Review and Case Presentation.

Version: 1 Date: 23 Sep 2019

Reviewer: Lisiane Bernardi

Reviewer's report:

General point:
Authors should be careful to explain certain dental treatment points:
As a pediatric dentistry specialist, I am still not comfortable in justify the absence of clinical records or the decision of future treatment, based on the difficulties explained by the age of the patient. I understand the difficulty to take pictures or impression, considering the general clinical condition of the patient (I think this was the real explanation...). The age may influence the treatment choices, but is not decisive in dental pediatric management; in other hand systemic healthy can be. Please, also consider this aspect in explanation.

In response to reviewer 3, the authors declared that the patient was caries-free. The authors should be add this information in the text. (remember to consider the intraoral exam limitations!).

Discussion:
In relation to the sentence in line 239-241:
Bruxism may cause periodontal trauma. In our patient, the combination of bruxism and poor oral hygiene places her at high risk of periodontal disease.

I suggest the authors to read the paper from Fan and Caton (reference below), since is still unclear the occlusal trauma and periodontal disease association.
