Title: Giant coronary aneurysms producing chest pain

Version: 0 Date: 27 Jan 2019

Reviewer’s report:

"Giant coronary aneurysms producing chest pain" is a case report about a patient with multiple giant coronary artery aneurysms, presenting with angina and undergoing resection and bypass surgery. The paper is overall well structured, with a natural flow and good standard of English language (with a few stylistic and spelling changes required to address a UK rather than US editorial style).

The case report does not, however, describe anything new. The presentation of aneurysms with chest pain is known, as is the option for surgical intervention. The images presented of the intra-operative findings would be an interesting short piece for an "Images" style paper, but the content does not lend itself sufficiently to a case report in the absence of other unique findings.

The authors should be commended for their efforts and scientific presentation, but unfortunately I do not imagine that this case will provide sufficient content of interest to the JCTS readership.
