Title: Right ventricular remodeling after conduit replacement in patients with corrected Tetralogy of Fallot - Evaluation by Cardiac Magnetic Resonance

Version: 0 Date: 24 Dec 2018

Reviewer’s report:

I’ve read with interest the article of Guné et colleagues entitled "Right ventricular remodeling after conduit replacement in patients with corrected Tetralogy of Fallot - Evaluation by Cardiac Magnetic Resonance". Despite the first impression, I’ll not recommend the publication until a more profound analysis has to be performed.

Here my suggestions:

- The study population is too small despite the recent report of SWEDCON. I believe the authors could get more information from the Swedish network

- The percutaneous valve implantation should be added to the comparison at for a complete and detailed overview of such problem as other authors do in literature. Including those patients will also increase the study population and give to the readers a full view of Fallot at long-term FU.
