Title: Total Aortic Arch Replacement Surgery with a Core Temperature of 34°C

Version: 0 Date: 15 Aug 2019

Reviewer: Henrique Murad

Reviewer's report:

The number of cases is very small and the follow up is very short to allow any conclusion for the validation of this operation. In the discussion there are very few comparison of your data with the medical literature. You should have some comments on why you have chosen to replace the arch in acute aortic dissection and why you have chosen to use the femoral artery for cannulation instead of the the axillary or innominate arteries

The focus of this paper should be on the surgical technique and not on the results and comparison with the other operations for acute aortic dissection is mandatory
