General comments
Rare clinical entity, of potential interest for the practice.
Some comments are given under specific comments.

Specific comments

1. The case description should be more clear and concise, in a couple of comprehensive sentences describing a CT and PET initially and after 6 months. It is a quite simple situation-to lesions in the ML and one in the lower lobe, with different PET features and with a dynamic in the lower lobe lesion growth. In the present form, the reader has a difficulty to follow the text, please simplify it.

2. The more detailed description of the intraoperative decisions is necessary. We have only the information that frozen section analysis showed no residual Tu at the bronchial margin. How did the authors decide to do middle and lower lobectomy? Did they send lesions from both lobes to ex tempore analysis and what was the result? Only the result of definitive histology is given.
