Title: Giant right coronary artery aneurysm mimicking a right intra-ventricular mass: a case report

Version: 0 Date: 31 Oct 2019

Reviewer: Christophe Baufreton

Reviewer's report:

In this case report, Teng et al the interest to think about a coronary artery aneurysm as it may mimic a heart tumor. The case is of interest and quite well presented. However, it would be better understood if the surgical management of the coronary artery would be further detailed. They claimed that they did not perform bypass surgery but it is not clear whether they occluded or not the artery to treat this aneurysm, which may have had an impact in the medium term postoperative outcome. Would a CABG during the first operation be helpful by avoiding the fistula at distance? If more information about the initial treatment could be provided, then I think that this case report is suitable for publication.
