Title: The prevalence and impact of self-reported foot and ankle pain in the over 55 age group: a secondary data analysis from a large community sample

Version: 1 Date: 22 Oct 2019

Reviewer: Edward Roddy

Reviewer's report:

Thank you to the authors for their responses to my comments. These are mostly addressed although there remain two outstanding comments from my original review:

1) The added detail about the methods of The North Yorkshire Health Study is helpful (comment 2 in my original review). One missing detail is how the information listed in the second sentence of the methods was collected. A questionnaire is mentioned in the penultimate sentence of this paragraph. Perhaps this could be mentioned to this second sentence.

2) I still feel that confidence intervals are needed for the prevalence estimates provided in table 2 (comment 6 in my original review). The abstract and the first paragraph in the discussion section comments on the relative prevalence of pain at different sites and the confidence intervals are needed to aid interpretation of these.
