Title: EVALUATION OF PSYCHOSOCIAL ASPECTS IN PARTICIPANTS OF CANCER GENETIC COUNSELING

Version: 0 Date: 21 Jul 2017

Reviewer: Sławomir Ertmanski

Reviewer's report:

Developing effective tools to diagnose patients requiring special psychological support is still an important task. This seems particularly important for oncological patients and those undergoing Cancer Genetic Counseling. The authors undertook an effort to create a dedicated tool (Psychological Health Interview - PHI) for detecting mental and wellbeing disorders and compared it to the commonly used Hospital Anxiety and Depression Scale (HADS).

The results are very promising and suggest that it is worth using a tool created by the authors to increase effectiveness of psychological diagnosis.

Hence, I believe that this is an important paper and deserves a publication.

Minor essential revisions:

1. Please correct the word "Anxiety" in Figure-1
2. Please correct Table 2 and Table 3. The parameter name should be in the same line as the values.
