Reviewer’s report:

The article "Carpal spasm in a young female as initial presentation of celiac disease- case report" reported young child who presented with carpal spasms and paresthesias of the extremities. Physical exam showed positive Chevostek and Trousseau signs. Development was relative in good condition initially. Lab exam showed hypocalcemia. Vit D deficiency with secondary hyperparathyroidism. Antibody and biopsy confirmed the diagnosis of celiac disease. Gluten free diet helped in control the symptom.

Celiac disease is related with hypocalcemia. Hypocalcemia can be the presenting symptom. Vit D deficiency due to malabsorption is cause of hypocalcemia. This has been reported in the past and known to the physicians who worked in this field. I did not see the need of publish another paper in this topic.
