Title: Success of anti-CD20 monoclonal antibody treatment for severe autoimmune hemolytic anemia caused by warm-reactive IgA, IgG, and IgM autoantibodies in a child: a case report

Version: 0 Date: 26 Mar 2017

Reviewer: Vasili Berdoukas

Reviewer's report:

The authors present a case of severe autoimmune hemolytic anemia associated with a combination of immunoglobulins in which they ultimately used rituximab in preference to other methods in an aim to reverse the anemia. The article is reasonably well written and well references. As there are not too many publications on the use of rituximab in children for AIHA this adds at least one additional case in which the anemia had no other cause and is of value for other physicians who will be encouraged to use rituximab in similar circumstances.

There were a few words that were strange that require attention. In the background section Line 39 the word "eutropic" is not commonly used and in line 44 when we refer to respiratory rate we usually state breaths rather than beats. On page 4 line 14-15 and do not know what iterative means.
