GABA-B Limbic Encephalitis and Asystolic Cardiac Arrest: A case report

In this paper, Authors report an interesting case of paraneoplastic limbic encephalitis that presented with refractory seizures and cardiac arrhythmias. The manuscript is well written, and carries a relevant clinical message regarding diagnosis and management.

*I have a few minor comments to clarify more the cardiac aspect of this case-report, since it is the novel association of limbic encephalitis:

1- After car crash, was there direct chest trauma? Commotio cordis may be associated with cardiac arrhythmias as AF, AV block etc.

2- Any data of echocardiogram, cardiac enzymes at the first admission following the car accident?

3- Please provide some EKGs recordings if available (AF and sinus arrest).

4- Is there any possible involvement of the autonomic nervous system in this limbic encephalitis in the associated cardiac arrhythmias.

Finally, do the Authors recommend antibodies screening for limbic encephalitis in patients with recurrent refractory seizures?
