Reviewer's report:

Dear author, I think that you should entirely rearrange your submission by focusing on the use of igs and polimixin in this multi drug resistant mediastinal infection. Moreover I think that it would be proper to describe the case report considering the time that the patient arrived at your ward as time zero. For instance the bacteria that you mention are, most likely, hospital acquired pathogens and you can't be sure that these pathogens were the original causative agents of the odontogenic and deep neck infection. Conclusively, you have an intubated patient, who was transmitted to your unit due to acute mediastinitis probably caused by a descending odontogenic infection with abscess formation, and you managed to help the patient with surgery and administration of ivig and polimixin (apart from the usual antibiotics). I think that if you build on this it will be a very interesting article.
