The authors substantially improved the manuscript. I would like to stress again that the journal they chose for publication is a psychology journal. thus, I strongly believe that the focus of the paper should be on health psychology rather than on sugar intake: in other words, sugar intake should only be an opportunity to study how different health related behavior might impact on everyday life. Thus, I suggest to change the introduction again. What I mean is that the introduction should not begin with the problem of sugar intake and dental caries but with the problem of health psychology.
